The real original piping system for "bootlegging" has been unearthed by the Topeka, Kansas, police. The system was found in a Negro's house in the "Bottoms." Instead of a water system being installed in one of the houses the police ran on to a regular arrangement of pipes, apparently for the accommodation of water, but really for the conveyance of beer to thirsty customers.

Detectives had watched the place day and night, and when they believed that the evidence was good enough they swooped down on the tappers and corralled the whole gang in the house.

Three of the men had glasses in their hands and were drinking, and the rest were standing with empty mugs.

The pipes were supplied from a hoghead of beer in the attic.

The expression, "mind your P's and Q's," is so common that most of us have never given thought to its origin. It is a peculiar phase of human nature that when we grow up with anything from infancy we never investigate it. The other night Professor Marte, lecturing to his dancing class, thus elucidated: "The initials stand for piers and queues—feet and pigtails. It was the caution given by all French dancing masters as far back as the time of Louis XIV., and up to the time of the revolution. It was then the fashion for the feet to be put in position and the bow to be made very low—a thing most difficult to do gracefully without moving the 'piers' or deranging the wig and throwing the 'queue' forward; hence the warning ministered by the terpsichorean professor."—New York Press.
